Are you interested in learning about a hospital-at-home (HaH) program? Thanks to HaH, some patients who require acute care can now receive it at home rather than in a hospital. To learn more, join a panel of three experts, Rani Snyder, Imran Ali, and Carol Levine for an in-depth discussion of the HaH program.

Rani Snyder, MPA

Rani E. Snyder, MPA, is Vice President, Program at The John A. Hartford Foundation. Ms. Snyder has over 25 years of experience working with preeminent health care institutions across the nation improving the care of older adults, identifying and guiding health care programs that have set the standard for medical best practices, increasing medical education opportunities, and maximizing resources to improve health care broadly. Her responsibilities at The John A. Hartford Foundation include coordinating initiatives that encourage collaboration among academic institutions, hospitals, and health care providers in order to build Age-Friendly Health Systems, support family caregivers, and improve serious illness and end-of-life care.
